Dear Friends,

Abraham Lincoln’s momentous leadership during the tumultuous Civil War and his tragic death elevated him to incredible heights in our national memory. At President Lincoln’s Cottage, the beloved home where he lived during much of the Civil War, visitors get to know the whole man, his private expressions of grief and frustration, his trial and error, his formative ideas on emancipation, and his greatest impact.

President Lincoln drafted and issued the preliminary Emancipation Proclamation while living here. The Emancipation Proclamation was a crucible of change for the war and for our country. We will be recognizing the 150th anniversary of this document throughout the next year with a series of programs and events here, in the place where the Emancipation Proclamation was nurtured, with plenty of online opportunities to connect. Our programs and exhibits will do much more than look back at the past; they will also look ahead at how Lincoln’s example and that of the men and women who fought for freedom—for themselves and others—150 years ago can inspire the fight against slavery today. See page 2 of this newsletter for information on two very different upcoming exhibits at the Cottage. I hope they excite you as much as they inspire us.

This issue, we opted to take a closer look at another of Lincoln’s proclamations, one that established a national day of giving thanks. I hope you enjoy reading our latest article, “Lincoln’s Other Proclamation” starting on page 4, and that you share it with family and friends as you gather together this week.

From all of us at President Lincoln’s Cottage, thank you for your continued interest and support and best wishes as we begin the holiday season! We hope to hear from you soon.

Erin Mast
Director
SEAT OF WAR
A Panoramic View of Civil War Washington through Historic Prints

The Civil War had arguably the greatest impact on Washington, DC of any single event in American history. Almost overnight, the seat of our nation’s government was transformed from a sleepy, southern town to the hub of the northern war effort, and was often referred to as the Seat of War.

Join us as we illuminate President Lincoln’s Civil War Washington through historic prints from our collection. This exhibit will be on view in the special exhibit gallery in the Robert H. Smith Visitor Education Center.

CAN YOU WALK AWAY?
MODERN SLAVERY & HUMAN TRAFFICKING IN THE UNITED STATES

This special exhibit will challenge perceptions of slavery in America today and raise awareness of a growing humanitarian crisis. By posing the question, “Can you walk away?” this exhibit will inspire people to engage with the modern abolitionist movement and to see that slavery is an ongoing issue that requires big thinking and direct action, just as it did in Lincoln’s time.
Comments from YOU

“Keep up the good work. Your newsletters are very informative and easy to read.” - J. K.

“Thank you for the fantastic newsletter. I was able to share a lot of the materials with my students and colleagues.” - L.T.

“What a beautifully put together newsletter! Chock full of interesting stories and updates - I thoroughly enjoyed reading it. Congratulations!” - F.L.

“This is a really terrific electronic newsletter. ... It is simple, readable and very well designed.” - R.M.

“For some reason the setting at the Soldier’s Home is conducive to ‘feeling’ Lincoln. It is a wonderful setting for the stories that were told to us about him. I also loved the fact that the only time they add furniture is when they know it is authentic replicas.” - E.&J. R.

“I just sent in a glowing survey of my cottage visit this summer. I was so impressed and very proud of all of your staff for their devotion to this important historical site.” - A.G.

“...I have to say, of all of the sites that I visited this year, it was the Lincoln Cottage that brought President Lincoln back to life for me.” - J.B.

2012 Sesquicentennial Ornament
Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclamation

This ornament is the second edition of the five piece President Lincoln’s Cottage Civil War Sesquicentennial Ornament Series. The custom brass and enamel 3D ornament depicts President Lincoln working on the Emancipation Proclamation by his bedside at the Cottage. The image is from the 1957 painting "Abraham Lincoln Writing the Emancipation Proclamation" by Jes W. Schlaikjer.

Available online and in our Museum Store at the Robert H. Smith Visitor Education Center. Supplies are limited - order today!

CLICK HERE TO PURCHASE

Schedule Your Class Trip to the Cottage!

★ To schedule your class field trip to the Cottage, please email lincoln_ed@nthp.org or call (202) 829-0436 x31232.

★ To order the new school programs brochure (shown on left), email lincoln_ed@nthp.org.
Lincoln’s Other Proclamation
The Creation of the First Annual Thanksgiving Day Tradition

By Zachary Klitzman

It was cold, windy, and rainy in Washington, and the President was ill. A week earlier, Abraham Lincoln had delivered the Gettysburg Address after sitting outside for two hours listening to Edward Everett orate. Now, in the last week of November 1863, Lincoln was “quite unwell,” suffering from a mild form of smallpox called varioloid. Despite his poor health, his humor remained intact; he remarked that “since he had been President he had always had a crowd of people asking him to give them something, but that now he has something to give them all.”

The timing of the President’s illness was unfortunate. That Thursday, the fourth Thursday in the month of November, marked the day that Lincoln had set aside for the first official national Thanksgiving Day.

Nearly two months earlier, while living at the Soldiers’ Home, Lincoln had issued a proclamation on October 3, announcing that “I do therefore invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise.”

Exactly 74 years before Lincoln issued the proclamation that would establish the annual national day of Thanksgiving in November, Washington issued a Thanksgiving Day Proclamation. The October 3, 1789 announcement read in part “Now therefore I do recommend and assign Thursday the 26th day of November next to be devoted by the People of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being, who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be.”

Though less overt than some earlier proclamations, religion was still the underlying reason for this proclamation. In the end, however, this order from Washington did not permanently establish an annual tradition (Washington did not announce another thanksgiving day until 1795).

For the next 65 years thanksgivings were established by governors of individual states, mostly in New England and other parts of the North. Presidential announcements were occasionally issued. Adams declared thanksgivings in 1798 and 1799 and Madison renewed the tradition in 1814 after the War of 1812 ended, and also declared two days of thanksgiving in 1815. Though some states refused to create thanksgivings, claiming they were remnants of Puritan religious zeal, 25 out of 32 states issued some kind of thanksgiving proclamation in 1858 on the eve of the Civil War.

As President, George Washington continued the tradition of issuing proclamations marking single days as days of “thanksgiving.”

As the Civil War wreaked havoc on the nation, Lincoln issued several thanksgiving proclamations to help the nation cope.
with the tragedy while remaining grateful that things were not worse. The first was a fairly unremarkable issuance on November 27, 1861 announcing that the “the municipal authorities of Washington and Georgetown in this District, have appointed tomorrow, the 28th instant, as a day of thanksgiving, the several Departments will on that occasion be closed, in order that the officers of the government may partake in the ceremonies.” This order was something of an anomaly for Lincoln’s thanksgiving proclamations. First, it was specific to the District of Columbia, whereas subsequent ones would be more national in focus. Second, due to the localized nature of the celebration, Lincoln ordered the day of thanksgiving less than 24 hours in advance. Third, and most importantly, the order was devoid of the religious and spiritual language that dominated his other Proclamations of Thanksgiving. This statement reads more like a routine memo than the appeal for national unity and gratitude that his later statements would inspire. (In fact, it was titled “Order for Day of Thanksgiving” as if it were coming from the Commander-in-Chief.)

The second officially released proclamation was more important. It came just three days after the Union’s victory at the Battle of Shiloh on April 7, 1862. In it, Lincoln recommended the “People of the United States... at their next weekly assemblages in their accustomed places of public worship which shall occur after notice of this proclamation shall be received” to “acknowledge and render thanks to our Heavenly Father for these inestimable blessings” of victory in battle. In addition to this religious gratitude, Lincoln implored the nation to remember and honor “those who have been brought into affliction by the causalties and calamities of sedition and civil war.” Thus, not only was this a step toward what we now know as Thanksgiving, but Lincoln’s proclamation perhaps foreshadowed national days of honoring soldiers like Memorial Day and Veterans Day as well. Thus, not only was this a step toward what we now know as Thanksgiving, but Lincoln’s proclamation perhaps foreshadowed national days of honoring soldiers like Memorial Day and Veterans Day as well.

“Acknowledged as with one heart and one voice
by the whole American People”

by Richard Hellesen; directed by Jennifer Nelson

January 20-February 12, 2012

One common goal. Two uncommon men. Playwright Richard Hellesen explores the two documented encounters between Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln during a period of national crisis. As Lincoln searches for a way to end slavery in the summers of 1863 and 1864, Douglass’s rhetoric and conviction challenges the president to envision a post-emancipation world. Together, the men ponder not only a unified nation but a society that brings truth to the Declaration of Independence assertion that “all men are created equal.” David Selby returns to play Lincoln after his stunning portrayal of the president in The Heavens Are Hung In Black. David Emerson Toney, who has previously appeared at Ford’s in a spell-binding production of Jitney as well as The Heavens Are Hung In Black, will play the role of Douglass.

Cottage fans can save 20% on tickets!

Use code COTTAGE online or at (800) 982-2787 by December 18, 2012.
*Valid only on rear orchestra seats. Not available for Saturday night or preview performances. Limit of 4 tickets/order.
Lincoln issued another Proclamation of Thanksgiving in mid July 1863 in gratitude of the Union victories at Gettysburg and Vicksburg two weeks prior. Unlike the November 27, 1861 proclamation which only applied to DC, or the April 10, 1862 declaration which did not specify a single day, this proclamation established August 6 as a national day set aside for prayer. However, this one-time observance was not enough for 74-year old magazine editor Sarah Josepha Hale.Originally from New England, Hale, the editor of Godey’s Lady’s Book, had been pushing for a national Thanksgiving Day since 1846. She had sent letters to Lincoln’s predecessors Zachary Taylor, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, and James Buchanan asking them to officially fix Thanksgiving to a specific date. None of them responded. Finally she wrote President Lincoln a letter dated September 28, 1863, saying “You may have observed that, for some years past, there has been an increasing interest felt in our land to have the Thanksgiving held on the same day, in all the States; it now needs National recognition and authoritative [sic] fixation, only, to become permanently, an American custom and institution.”

Lincoln responded by issuing the proclamation of October 3 that firmly established Thanksgiving as a national holiday on the last Thursday of November. In the Proclamation, which was hand-written by Secretary of State William Seward, though signed off and approved by Lincoln, the nation was reminded that “The year that is signed off and approved by Lincoln, the holiday the following November it marked two straight years of celebrating Thanksgiving on a late Thursday in November. The modern tradition was established.

In addition to the national day established in 1863, Lincoln still issued “special occasion” measures of thanksgiving, including one on September 3, 1864. just days after Atlanta fell to Union forces. The next month, Hale sent Seward a letter dated October 9 reminding him of the upcoming holiday and hoping that “President Lincoln will [issue] his proclamation appointing the last Thursday in November as the Day.” By issuing the proclamation sooner rather than later, “the important paper would have time to reach the knowledge of American citizens in Europe and Asia, as well as throughout our wide land...[It], on land and sea, wherever the American Flag floats over an American citizen, all should be invited and unite in this National Thanksgiving, would it not be a glorious Festival” she asked.

Lincoln apparently agreed with Hale, issuing another proclamation October 20 to confirm the nation’s Thanksgiving observance. “It has pleased Almighty God to prolong our national life another year, defending us with his guardian care against unfriendly designs from abroad, and vouchsafing to us in His mercy many and signal victories over the enemy, who is of our own household” the proclamation started. Thus “I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby, appoint and set apart the last Thursday in November next as a day, which I desire to be observed by all my fellow-citizens wherever they may then be as a day of Thanksgiving.” When Americans observed the holiday the following November it marked two straight years of celebrating Thanksgiving on a late Thursday in November. The modern tradition was established.

FOOT NOTES
3 Lincoln never incorporated the Pilgrim and Indian Thanksgiving narrative into any of his proclamations
6 “Order for Day of Thanksgiving” November 27, 1861 in CW V: 32
7 “Proclamation of Thanksgiving for Victories”. April 10, 1862 in CW V: 184-86
8 Hale, though not a household name today, contributed greatly to early American society. In addition to pushing for a national Thanksgiving celebration, she wrote Mary Had a Little Lamb, helped raise $30,000 for the Bunker Hill memorial in Boston, and advocated for the preservation of Mount Vernon.
9 Via http://showcase.netins.net/web/creative/lincoln/speeches/thanks.htm
10 “Proclamation of Thanksgiving,” October 3, 1863, in CW VI: 496-7 11 “The Year We Had Two Thanksgivings” Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library and Museum. Marist College . http://docs.fdrlibrary.marist.edu/thanksgiving
12 “Proclamation of Thanksgiving,” October 20, 1863, in CW VII: 56-61
13 “Proclamation of Thanksgiving,” October 20, 1863, in CW VII: 56-57
By the President of the United States of America.

A Proclamation.

The year that is drawing towards its close, has been filled with the blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies. To these bounties, which are so constantly enjoyed that we are prone to forget the source from which they come, others have been added, which are of so extraordinary a nature, that they cannot fail to penetrate and soften even the heart which is habitually insensible to the ever watchful providence of Almighty God. In the midst of a civil war of unequaled magnitude and severity, which has sometimes seemed to foreign States to invite and to provoke their aggression, peace has been preserved with all nations, order has been maintained, the laws have been respected and obeyed, and harmony has prevailed everywhere except in the theatre of military conflict; while that theatre has been greatly contracted by the advancing armies and navies of the Union. Needful diversions of wealth and of strength from the fields of peaceful industry to the national defense, have not arrested the plough, the shuttle or the ship; the axe has enlarged the borders of our settlements, and the mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals, have yielded even more abundantly than heretofore. Population has steadily increased, notwithstanding the waste that has been made in the camp, the siege and the battle-field; and the country, rejoicing in the consciousness of augmented strength and vigor, is permitted to expect continuance of years with large increase of freedom. No human counsel hath devised nor hath any mortal hand worked out these great things. They are the gracious gifts of the Most High God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, hath nevertheless remembered mercy. It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently and gratefully acknowledged as with one heart and one voice by the whole American People. I do therefore invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the Heavens. And I recommend to them that while offering up the ascriptions justly due to Him for such singular deliverances and blessings, they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to His tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners or sufferers in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged, and fervently implore the interposition of the Almighty Hand to heal the wounds of the nation and to restore it as soon as may be consistent with the Divine purposes to the full enjoyment of peace, harmony, tranquility and Union.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this Third day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the Unites States the Eighty-eighth.

By the President: Abraham Lincoln

William H. Seward,
Secretary of State